

Leaving a Spiritual Legacy, a Priceless Inheritance

Each of us is a missionary, and our mission field is our children and the other people in our lives. God's plan, even in Old Testament times, was for people of faith to pass on their faith to the next generation. This happens in numerous concrete ways over the years of our loved ones' lives.

A legacy is inevitable. You will pass things down to the next generation. Even if you don't have much materially to leave behind, you will instill character traits, talents, hobbies, skills and more in your children and grandchildren. The same is true for those of us who are single. Our lives and our faith are our legacy. But how valuable will your legacy be? Will you leave anything that has relevance and benefit for this life and eternity?

The most valuable legacy we can pass to our loved ones is a spiritual legacy – the legacy of our faith in Christ. Although every individual must make his or her own decision for Christ, there are things we can do to create an atmosphere where faith can thrive. When we consistently show them the

Are you ready to start thinking and planning for your spiritual legacy?

value and relevancy of faith in Christ, that's a legacy not easily tossed aside.

Are you ready to start thinking and planning for your spiritual legacy?

Our helpful video gives guidance and insight in an informative easy-to-understand format laced with real life stories.

If you were to die tonight, would you be leaving behind a clear message to your family, friends, and world about your faith in Christ, your love for them and your hope for them? If not, what do you need to do to prepare for your departure from this earth? Get answers and guidance in this video by Dr. Joel Woodruff, President of the C.S. Lewis Institute.

For more information and to watch the video go to:
<https://cslewisinstitute.org/legacyresources>